

The Finger of God

Introduction

BANG-BANG-BANG - loud hits on my door got my attention. But I was naked like the day I was born. And, no time to get clothes so I boldly opened the door and in turn shocked the visitor. Not really, I chickened out. Instead, I opened my window to see who it was. Two of my neighbours shouted to me: "There's a fire!" Sure enough, about two blocks away, flames rose in the air about forty feet. It looked spectacular! But also frightful. Because a strong north wind was fanning the flames. Even though, the fire was veering away from us, that all could change if the wind shifted direction. I got dressed quickly and joined my neighbours outside. Reports came in fast from our phones and a hand radio: No immediate danger to anyone. That was good. And then the sound of fire truck sirens made a cacophony of noise and excitement. A small crowd gathered to watch. What just happened? A birth. The fire to move, then blood and water align to usher in the birth. There's a push in one direction. A group of people are tuned into the event Then it finally happens – followed by bells and whistles.

Something very similar, Heart of the Moon believes they answered the door to do a spiritual service, as a way to help usher in a new beginning on a personal and societal level. Part of the crowd of onlookers as it were. Such as a spiritual nudge for someone, what a spark can do for a fire, and perhaps once in awhile an energy check up. Or a heads-up with energetic forecasts such as astrological reports which could effect society especially when Pluto is direct. The calling felt true, but also re-opened old spiritual wounds which was painful. Have you ever noticed, the feelings and emotions that happen in an actual birth seem to happen in new beginnings as well? To elaborate, my father was an ordained minister of the Anglican church. During a church service, when I was four years old I saw the crucifix for the first time. Or more specifically, I felt the mystical spirit of peoples' zeal for a person bloodied on a cross for the first time. The experience was a step outside of the norm for myself. And so, I remember that day like it was yesterday. But little did I know, the crucifix is actually a reminder of pain goes alongside a new beginning. But why? I think like many children though, any new thing just peaked my curiosity.

I was 11 years old, and I guess my curiosity got the better of me, so I started to read the Bible. And read it, over and over, through the years. I was fascinated with many of the verses like the parable of the mustard seed. Because, Heaven sure sounded like a great long-term investment. And then the parable of the servant with the talents, helped to put one and one together for myself, which I understood as investing in the self and the community. Those two writings were quite easy to appreciate because they formed a mental concept. Others not so much and were more like a paradox. Like one time, my father had just gotten back from a theological conference in Toronto, Canada. That was when, I mentioned something about the Book of Revelation to him. My father was excited I was reading the Bible and surprised. And then, my father told me something I'll never forget. He said, at the conference there was actually a lot of discussion around the Book of Revelation. In the end, they believed Revelation was exactly that, insight, as in a reveal into the window of time. As in, it wasn't prophecy it was possibility. At that time, I didn't have a strong opinion of anything, so I just soaked the information in like a sponge. But then off and on for years, I tested that. It became a philosophical conundrum for myself. If Revelation is prophecy, it implies, a restriction on a choice of action. And thus, freedom of thought is limited. So, in the end, we're limited in making any choices at all. Which just seemed like a giant paradox of how nature works. Yet, according to the quantum world, there's only possibilities. Now that seems more reasonable. Does it not? But is that necessarily a good thing? Because with so many options, we could spend a great deal of time exploring them without ever coming up with anything. Nonetheless, the idea of possibilities casts a shadow of doubt on the prophecy provision of Revelation. In turn, gives a glimmer of hope to change a course of action. But what if we're so used to routine that it seems like the law of the land? As if choice is not even an option anymore. When I went to college and university, I got my own apartment which was nice. The place provided all the essentials like you would expect. Except it didn't come with a stove. OK...no problem, because going to college was 'ruffing' it for a bit. But I did get a hot plate with two elements and a microwave. It wasn't as if I could afford gourmet dinners anyway. But each time I used the two elements it triggered the fuse breaker. Short of redesigning the electrics, two elements was just not going to be an option. But, over time I got used to cooking only with one element, so that was my routine for about five years. So much so, it carried over after my education was done. I used to make breakfast for a friend and myself, and I cooked with one element, as a result, sometimes, it took two hours to make breakfast. I was lost in my routine, that is until my friend in her own way woke me up. Afterwards, the breakfast experience became more enjoyable for her and myself. Because, I started to use multiple elements. And then, sure enough the cooking time for breakfast became less than 30 minutes. Is that the case sometimes though? Far more intense though, I had experienced a lot of chaos in my life, like it was routine. So much so that, if I wasn't feeling chaotic than I had to create it. But then, that all changed when the idea of choice settled into my awareness, with guidance and support from someone. Afterwards, a whole new world of options opened up for myself. Like I was reborn.

Epilogue

- The last will be first -

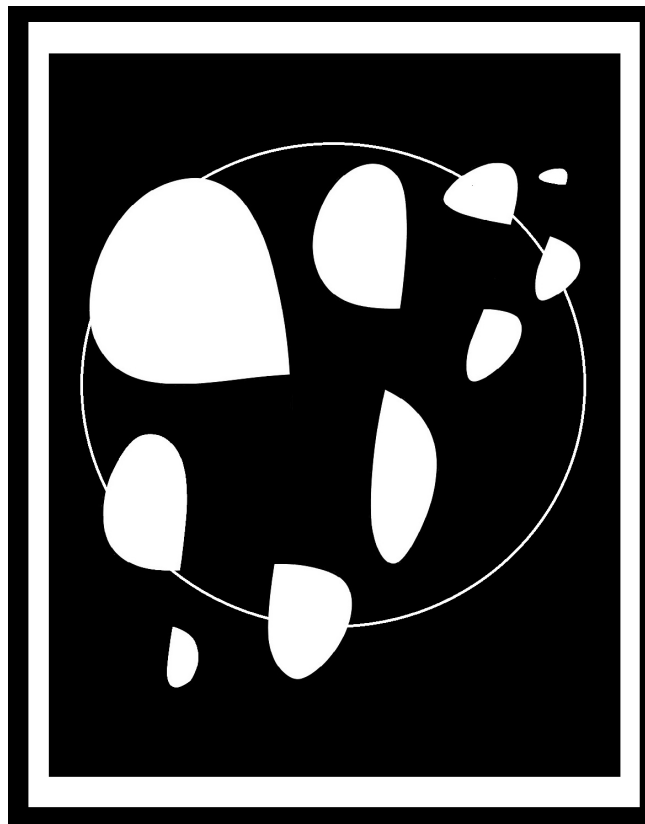

Module I – Crucible of Darkness

Of the paradoxical Finger of God. So here's something like a chapter out of a fantasy. Invites the reader to think of events in the terms of energy as in the following. Anything out of balance seems to try and correct itself. There was a time when Source heard the cries of Israel. And then answered them. That was when slavery was a routine for them. We have to read between the lines, and surmise that Moses somehow found out about his secret beginnings. Which prompted him to come to the defence of one of his Hebrew "brethren", so the Scorpion Moses struck out and killed the Egyptian. In turn, that prompted Pharaoh to pursue the same course of action towards Moses. Consequently, Moses had to flee into the desert. In a Mars Tower Moment of sudden and unexpected changes that threw Moses out of his ivory tower of comfort and security. But that also came with an unexpected offer. Just take in the energy of the Four of Cups.

Not surprisingly, Moses would have had his attention on three other cups. But, little did he know, he got thrown into the Crucible of Darkness – Pluto's Underworld. Because just consider the shape of the constellation of Scorpio, its tail is a shape of a bowl. At the beginning, Moses walked erratically into the spiritual soul journey of the Scorpion and its energetic partner the Bull. As it would have it, the co-rulers of Scorpio, Mars and Pluto immediately asserted their influence on the situation. Now consider the shape and location of the constellation of Serpens the Snake. First though, Serpens energizes the first decante of Scorpius the Scorpion. It might be helpful to consider Serpens as the first module of the Scorpion's soul journey. In which, the energy of Serpens is the blueprint in which to operate in the first module. For example, the shape of Serpens is split, thus Moses had the challenge to literally put his life and head back together towards some kind of purpose. Next, consider the location of the split snake in the sky, in between Serpens Cauda and Serpens Caput, there's a chasm that falls directly into the Scorpion's crucible tail shape. It was the most extreme reset, yet, had the intention of spirituality cleansing Moses. A good deal by Pluto's all seeing eye. If Pluto had a mirror, it would reveal the dew of knowledge inside us. The whole picture.

Which was meant to divert Moses' attention from the three of cups of his previous life to the whole picture of his entire self, which included the Divine offer that hovers beside him – a new vision and purpose. And as we will see later his deepest secrets. It's believed he fled in a westerly direction. Towards and beyond the Gulf of Aqaba. Other ways we can match up events, is by answering the following question, what is the nature of a Scorpion? If we can answer that than we have a very good idea of the soul journey of Scorpius. In turn, transpose it to events. We know a scorpion enjoys a lair. And so, after the initial shock had dissipated, other energies in the module came online, such as the energy from the Scorpion's spiritual partner. One was, the mystical constellation that hovers just above the Bull which is the Seven Sisters or the Pleiades. Along with the energy of the Four of Pentacles which would have helped to get Moses' feet back on the ground.

All is not “Kaput”. And we actually know the itinerary of the entire set of modules. Because, just consider the entire human body in terms of energy, that is in terms of the spirits of the 12 zodiac constellations. In due time it will be apparent the knees are a reflection of Scorpius and of its dual nature. The entire spiritual body can be defined by four distinct sections: Spring by the equation of a circle or two as one, Summer by period, Fall by linear and Winter by polynomial. Thus for the Scorpion, the fall linear expression is upwards. And, Taurus the Bull is two as one an expression of a circle, with the caveat at the same time. Consequently, it's no wonder the five senses at the same time take Taurus the Bull on adventures. But there needs to be structure and that's what the neck provides. And so Moses had the foundation to re-connect Serpens Kaput to the entire body. It's obvious water and earth go together very well, but is that the same way with the curve and line? That is, does Taurus and Scorpius make good teammates? Notice a Scorpion glows on the outside but then there's the inside thanks to Pluto's Mirror. Similarly, look at the constellation of Taurus, both of its horns are illuminated by the glow of the Milky Way galaxy at the same time. Which suggests the Bull brings its entire self into the light. Yes but, at the same time its torso is in complete shadow, so what gives? All together, that's still two as one. Fair enough, but then Pluto turns both of their lights outside-in to illuminate their dark areas. In this world of duality, that's what gets released. In many respects, exhibiting a new personality.

Alien or human? Have you heard of the premise, to describe the shocking personality change that some people go through, as alien possession? That's a theory anyway. So, here's another theory. The transformation that happens during the first decante of Scorpio is life changing. As it turned out in a reading for Scorpius, the Whispering Rose spread picked up the soul journey of Moses. In the low spot of the spread, getting thrown into the Crucible of Darkness for maximum stress, as the strength of the Eight of Fire was overturned. Why did it take 40 years though? When it's possible to get something in a virtual instant such as Gemini energy. Divine timing? Perhaps. Or maybe the stubbornness of the Bull rubbed off on Moses? A combination of both? Maybe it's a reminder, that sometimes we can be our own worst enemy, in the way of our own soul call, like in the Bat tea leaf card. But then, whatever were the energies that held Moses' attention in the Four of Cups card, they are negated with the Jester card paired with the Ethereal Voices card – which is not this. Then ask yourself how does a star form in a nebula? Maximum stress and then direction outwards...KA-POW! A star is born. And then, consider the astrological Star aspect which showed up as the energy of the Star card, which also turns it up to the 'MAX' but then a new direction. In other words, something new emerges out of raw material. As it turned out, towards the Queen of Fire, known for her diplomacy. But also known for her action potential. The Pentacles are restored, along with an entirely new individual - spiritual evolution with the Goldfish tea leaf card. And then to top everything off, making that mad dash in the direction of a vision-the Cheetah. Alien or human?

To be continued...